    - If you test positive for COVID-19, the Public Health Department will contact you to follow-up; it is essential to take this call. Public Health officials will ask you about the places you have been and the people you have been around while you were infectious. The people you mention will then be contacted, but they will not be told your name or contact information. They will be asked to stay home to help prevent others from getting sick
    - If you have been in contact with someone with COVID-19, remain home for 14 days after your last contact with the person. Additionally, the Health Department will call you to follow-up; it is important to take this call. They will ask you if you are experiencing any symptoms or if you have been tested. They will also ask about places you may have been to. They will provide you with information on the next steps, as well as how to access services such as COVID-19 testing or how to find a doctor if you don't have one already.
